The Residential Student Experience

My living experience on campus was so impactful, because some of my favorite memories in college were the "late night conversations" sitting in the living room of a Copper Beech apartment, or the last-minute decisions to go out, or do something with my roommates and teammates. You just don't get those experiences living off campus. My best advice to incoming students who will be sharing a space, or living away for the first time is to OVER communicate. It is best to set the clearest boundaries and expectations from the jump, rather than trying to problem solve your way through them later down the line. - Mallory Gilmore '25

Living on campus was such a meaningful experience for me because I truly felt like I had a purpose here. I made it my goal not just to grow and learn for myself but to step out and create opportunities that I wouldn't have had if I had stayed in my room. Meeting new people, building connections, and feeling the genuine support from faculty and staff made all the difference. It was empowering to know that I had a community that wanted to see me succeed. Beyond the classroom, I found so many valuable outlets for learning and personal growth, which made my time on campus even more impactful. - Alisha Masson '26

From on-campus events, such as bingo nights and basketball games, to hanging out with your friends after class, you truly grow to love campus life. I find ways to get involved across campus to not only meet people but find ways to contribute to the Nichols community. My advice is to make a conscience effort to step outside your comfort zone. Although it seems cliché, I met my best friends from simply approaching a group of students on the quad. Everyone is looking to make connections, so be the one to say "hello". - Maya Orbeagozo '27
